In addition to holding and managing land for wildlife habitat, passive recreation, water-quality protection and open space, the Audubon Society of Rhode Island offers educational programs for adults and children and an environmental advocacy program. An independent state organization that focuses on the local scene, the Society receives all its funds from membership and private donations. If you are a member, we thank you for your support. If you haven't added your help to our important work, we invite you to join us.
